LOYALTY.

Patriotism, love of country, is the crown of glory to any man; but loyalty, cringing to a master, is wearing the collar of a dog. Patriotism is only another name for disregard of rightful authority; loyalty is the cement of well ordered society. Such are the widely different opinions cherished in regard to these two words, which are, after all, only different phases of one and the same sentiment. Patriotism, like the love of a husband for a wife, expresses a feeling in the broadest and most general aspect. Loyalty, like jealousy, in the proper meaning of that term, expresses the same feeling in its sensitiveness toward anything that would interrupt fullest harmony and sympathy. There is, therefore, in our use of the word "loyalty," special reference to the personal element, and it implies an honorable regard for that which others are disposed to tamper with and destroy. Many seem disposed to disbelieve or deny the possibility of any such sentiment as loyalty under a republican government, because there is no individual sovereign to whom personal attachment can be felt. But the war of secession in the United States brought out strongly sentiments both of patriotism and loyalty, both generous and honorable regard for the well-being and advancement of the nation, and was equally honorable and noteworthy of the worthiness and perpetuity of the union of the States.

In an article on "Loyalty," which appeared in the Fortnightly Review early in the year 1882, attention was called to the fact of its derivation from loy, like royal from roi, and to the similarity of the kindred group of words, "legal," "loyal," "lawful," "regal," "royal," "kingly," etc., from the Latin, French and Saxon, respectively. Loyalty is, properly, conformity to law, a staunch republican word, expressing the ideas of duty toward a community, owed by every member of that community. But it would seem that in the Dark Ages it passed into a sentiment more appropriate to feudal times, the idea of personal obligation owed by one man to another. The good citizen obeys the law, not as a matter of good faith between man and man, but because it is a duty he owes to the whole community of which he is a part. The loyal subject does his duty as a matter of personal obligation, as it were, in compliance with a promise, expressed or implied.

Montesquieu, in his "Spirit of the Laws," says, forcibly, that honor is the vital principle of good government, as fear is of despotism. So, unless loyalty, in the sense of devotion to the personal leader, is kept in true and balanced activity by the higher principle of obedience to law, it may pass into the dangerous and disgraceful spirit that cringes and flatters and toadies, when it should stand up and speak out for the truth and the right. The mere groveling worship of rank is at best a base sentiment, a very different spirit from the chivalrous, unselfish sentiment of true loyalty. Any such compliance with the personal will of the ruler, as tampering with truth and morality, is debasing; it is certainly not ennobling.

LATE FOREIGN NEWS

China.
The ocean yacht race was sailed on the 20th ult. Three yachts competed, the Ariel, Naomi and Kathleen. The Ariel won.

A serious outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia has taken place in the English Colony within the last few days. The Government has taken steps to deal with the disease.

A coolie named Leung Asau, charged with adultery, was taken out by members of the Triad Society at Hongkong and literally hacked to pieces. Three men have been arrested.

The dangers of a threatened riot from the disturbance which arose through the carrying of a dragon in procession on the 6th inst., when an assault was made on the police, has passed.

A Chinese passenger by the Glenavon was robbed of jewelry to the value of $6,000 and a draft of $5,000 on the way up from Singapore. Two of the other passengers have been arrested on suspicion.

The Marine Court of Inquiry was held to inquire into the circumstances attending the piracy on board the Greyhound. The Court found they were "unable to attribute blame to any of the officers." Some fresh arrests have been made at Macao.

The Captain-Superintendent of Police informs the Government that owing to the successful arrangements of the Chinese authorities for the suppression of salt smugglers, these men have lost their usual employment, and it is probable that they will resort to piracy.

Corea.
A telegraph line from Seoul to Fusan will be commenced in January.

The Corean Government contemplates changing the style of dress for officials so as to resemble the Chinese style.

It is reported that the Italian Government will send an Ambassador to Corea toward the end of this month, for the purpose of making a treaty of commerce and friendship with that country.

Advices from Corea state that Japanese residents in Seoul, as well as the Corean people, not unnaturally expected trouble upon the return of Tai-In-Kun, but things seem to indicate the contrary, and the old Prince and Japanese Charge d'Affaires appear to be on good terms. Japanese residents are consequently released from anxiety.

The War in the Balkans.

The rejection of the Bulgarian terms by Serbia implies that Austria deems a continuation of the war not necessarily injurious to her interests. The Powers have notified Serbia that fighting must cease, but for all that it does not cease, and cannot cease so long as each of the belligerents claims territory occupied by the other.

It must always be remembered that Russia owes Austria a grudge, and that, as usual in despotic monarchies, the Russian statesmen have long memories and sharp blades. It was evidently the impression in Count Taaffe's mind that Russia would actively espouse the cause of Prince Alexander. The Cabinet of St. Petersburg did nothing of the kind, but, on the contrary, allowed it to be understood that it would welcome a new competitor for the Bulgarian throne. It was undoubtedly in part in reliance on this attitude of Russia that Austria pushed Serbia into the fray. It would be characteristic of Russian diplomacy to have lured Austria on into the melee, intending at the right time to reverse the machine and come out in favor of a great Slav nationality.

Austria made a fatal mistake thirty years ago when she threw her influence into the scale on the side of the allies against Russia. The Muscovite Empire has never forgiven her, and when the right time comes it will have its revenge. The only importance which attaches to the Servo-Bulgarian conflict arises from the possibility that it may furnish the desired opportunity.—S. F. Chronicle.

A Korroboree in Australia.

After dinner, which was at 6 P. M., we went to see a korroboree, where the black fellows were encamped at a short distance from the house. There were two tribes of these, and about 200 of them in all. They were painted with white and black streaks across the face and chest, and got up in correct style with skins and spears and boomerangs, and by the light of the fires which were kindled in a circle around, they looked sufficiently hideous. The tribes danced alternately, and the watchwords of their songs appeared to be half English, half native. A great deal of the action of the dance consisted in striking the ground at the same moment, so as to cause an echoing thud with their feet. One of the repeated actions was to cause the muscles of the legs and thigh to quiver simultaneously from toe and stomach in a most extraordinary manner. At the end of each figure they brought themselves up sharp, with a deep-toned sound, half hurrah, half grunt, "Wur—r—wuh!" They would then wheel right across the inclosed space in line, chattering as fast as they could, upon the women who were sitting on the ground, and also singing a sort of chorus of a few notes; the line would then wheel back, break up into twos and threes, brandishing their short sticks and clubs over their heads, each man vociferating quickly to his mate, and then all of a sudden these incoherent sounds would all coalesce together into a chorus, and the band, again united, would cause the ground once more to vibrate to the reiterated cadence of their stamp.—English Illustrated Magazine.
